

A black and white woodcut-style illustration of a woman in profile, facing left. She has long, wavy hair and is wearing a draped garment, possibly a dress or shawl, over her shoulders. The style is reminiscent of classical art.

heavy betting on Sharkey's chances by those who have been identified with him in his training and his management since this match was made. Up to 9 o'clock, Tom O'Rourke the saloon's manager, had made no big wagers. He said he was waiting for rinside odds and would back his man liberally when the opportunity was offered.

Outside of this select circle there seemed to be an increase in the number of Sharkey supporters. It was particularly noticeable that every Tammany man of sporting proclivities fanned Sharkey to win. As O'Rourke is closely identified with Dry Dollar Sullivan, this was taken to mean that Sharkey's managers who were getting their money down in London.

Another point, looked upon as significant, was the following Sharkey had among patrons of pugilism who never miss a show. Men who have attended every fight of any account since the Horton law was put into effect, and who are considered conservative in judgment, looked upon the fight as an even break, and consequently, by no means an odd-on affair.

Beggars in various classes, and they court to know something about it, were for the most part Sharkey men. And the "red men gals" as they are known to the sporting fraternity, were in the same category. The public at large heavy betting on Sharkey's chances by those who have been identified with him in his training and his management since this match was made. Up to 10 o'clock Tom O'Rourke the club manager, had made no odds. He said he was waiting for inside odds and would back his man liberally when the opportunity was offered.

Outside of this select circle there seemed to be an increase in the number of Sharkey supporters. It was particularly noticeable that the clamorous ring of sporting creditors fanned Sharkey to win. As O'Rourke is closely identified with Dry Bellar Sullivan, this was taken to mean that Sharkey's management was getting their money down in bundles.

Another point, looked upon as significant, was the following: Sharkey had among patrons of pugilism who tower high above him. Men who have staved every fight of any account since the Hurton law was put into effect, and who are considered conservative in judgment, looked upon the fight as an even break, and, consequently, by no means an odds-on affair. Pugilists in various classes, and the court to know the inside of the matter, were most partial to Sharkey's men. And the rest was gone," as they are known to the sporting fraternity, were in the same category. The public at large